

ABSTRACT

A method for a production monitor controller used in a finishing system wherein the controller uses information concerning the constraints of devices within the system to break the job into job segments wherein each job
5 segment conforms to the constraints of the devices operating on the job segment. A method is also disclosed for creating a job model comprised of a hierarchy of nodes that together describe the job and each of its components. The elements of the production monitor controller is also disclosed.